BACKGROUND
The international community is conducting a series of engagements and initiatives to ensure that the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) are met by 2030 through adequate financial provisions by all countries.

One of the ways through which these goals could be achieved is by ensuring that assets recovered as proceeds of corruption are returned to requesting states and channeled towards meeting the SDGs by various social welfare and social protection projects.

The strategy by which UN member states intend to achieve this goal is by implementing Resolution 69/313 of the UN General Assembly of 27th July 2015 on strategies for financing social development projects towards achieving the SDGs by 2030. The agenda known as the Addis Action Agenda is founded on the outcome of the Third International Conference on Financing for Development and lists seven action areas that are an integral part of the means of implementation of achieving the SDGs, through a series of financing measures, comprised by the Addis Ababa Action Agenda.

At a recent International Expert Meeting on Management and Disposal of Recovered and Returned Stolen Assets organized by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) together with the Governments of Ethiopia and Switzerland, held in Addis Ababa from 14 to 16 February 2017, Nigeria was recognized as an example of successful use of an asset return. A case highlighted was one that returned $700m to Nigeria by Switzerland for the NEEDS project involving a number of CSOs in the planning and monitoring of social investment projects. This serves as a best-case example that demonstrates how the effective return of assets can directly contribute to a concrete measure of public social good in line with the sustainable development goals. There is a need to collect and demonstrate such and other best practices, so that requesting states and requested states may promote a successful agenda through more expeditious and effective means in the future.

Despite the internationally recognized integrity and transparency of the current government, and its determination to recover stolen public assets and fight corruption, Nigeria has not frontally taken any initiative to make its voice heard within the international community. This conference aims to improve asset return and raise the awareness around the use of returned assets for sustainable development. Furthermore, punishment measures for perpetrators of acts of corruption within national borders will be highlighted, as well as internationally. Ultimately, there is a need for national legal systems to increase its corruption response, and ensure that the international legal systems back up and complement national efforts when these fall short due to inherent weaknesses.

Nigeria recently led the passage of a UN General Assembly (UNGA) Resolution on Promotion of International Cooperation to Combat Illicit Financial Flows in Order to Foster Sustainable Developments following the President’s visit and address to UNGA in 2016. Nigeria is stepping up its efforts by advancing this position by further activity. Other key reasons why this activity should be implemented are as follows;

1. CLOSING KNOWLEDGE GAP ON ILLICIT FINANCIAL FLOWS.
It is generally recognized that there is a knowledge gap on the nature and effect of annual cross border flow of proceeds of criminal activity currently estimated at between US$1-1.6trillion. Half of these flows come from developing and transitional economies. The global shadow financial system sustains illicit financial flows by public and private sector through various means including direct looting, money laundering, tax evasion, profit shifting by multinational corporations, trade mis-pricing and mis-invoicing etc. It is important that developing countries improve their capacity in order to understand and stem illicit financial flows, enhance cooperation of tax authorities, share information for peer learning and develop a corps of experts to advise and work in this area.

2. ENHANCING ASSET RETURN PROCESS
Where illicit flows are successfully traced, the effective return of assets remains a major challenge for developing countries and various legal and administrative obstacles still stand in the way of the effective and efficient return of assets. A number of African countries are currently struggling with asset return notably Nigeria and a number of Arab countries. Other African countries are struggling with return of valuable assets or illegal flows proceeding from natural resources.

3. IMPROVING SANCTIONS AND ENFORCEMENT
In light of weaknesses in governance systems and institutions of states including judicial institutions, many requesting states are unable to prosecute or bring suspects of crime of corruption and illicit flows to justice. Nigeria for example was unable to prosecute the former governor of Delta State in Nigeria. She had to depend on British courts to convict the suspect using evidence gathered in Nigeria but largely ignored by Nigerian court. Such situations calls for examining more effective liability measures and sanctions of perpetrators of illicit financial flows and other acts of corruption in accordance with the UNCAC Conference of State Parties Resolution 6/6 on Asset Recovery and Asset Return.

4. BUILDING ON EXISTING INTERNATIONAL RESOLUTIONS ON IFF AND ASSET RETURN
G77 Resolution 17 of Dec. 2016 and UNCAC Conference of State Parties Resolution 6/6 on Asset Recovery and Asset Return are recent key instruments towards improving the asset return process. These resolutions were both sponsored and supported by requesting states who face frustration in the asset return process. However, requesting states have yet to initiate a platform to express their concerns about the challenges of illicit financial flows, asset return and associated issues. And although the globally acclaimed Thabo Mbeki Report made major headway in addressing and raising awareness on the magnitude of this problem, far more needs to be done.

In furtherance of these observations, Nigeria is proposing the convening of this conference on the issues of Illicit Financial Flows and Asset Return with a view to raise further awareness and enhance international cooperation around these issues. An important step to that effect will be to further the discussion through a GA-resolution on promoting international cooperation in combatting illicit financial flows and enhancing asset recovery. Furthermore, the conference will assist the delegates in evaluating the role that appropriate use of returned assets can play in achieving the sustainable development goals.

Holding IFF Facilitators and Intermediaries Accountable

Corruption has many facilitators but only few of those complicit in the chain of organized criminality of IFF get the deserved attention. Corruption facilitators and intermediaries otherwise known as middlemen exist in all types of cases but are prominent in some categories. Middlemen may include real estate agents, brokers, trust experts, commercial actors, financial institutions, lawyers, bankers, auditors, accountants etc. all of which help to move criminal assets and falsify records. The session underscores the importance of holding these facilitators of illicit financial flows accountable for their roles in condoning its continued practice.

Enhancing Asset Recovery and Asset Return

The international community demonstrated with UNCAC its strong denunciation of corruption and by extension IFF. However, the zeal accompanying asset recovery has not always been matched by the same ambition and urgency for asset return due to a myriad of factors in both requesting and requested states. Tension has thus been growing between developed countries that receive stolen assets and requesting states who are asking for their stolen assets to be returned unconditionally. This session will examine mechanisms by which cooperation can be enhanced and measures to facilitate and ease recovery and return of stolen assets back to requesting states.

Management and Application of Returned Assets for SDG and Human Rights

Corruption is widely known to impede development and worsen growth indicators. It diverts resources meant for public good to private pockets for private gain. This factor is partly responsible for current advocacy that returned assets must be brought back into the sphere of the public good taking account of existing international commitments such as the SDGs and the fundamental human rights and needs of local citizens. Governments of requesting states must take into account the human rights violations occasioned by the continued mismanagement and malpractice.
